I am opposed to cellular telephone use on aircraft. Such use would increase passenger hostility. Internet connection or other silent communication is more appropriate. Unless the cell-phone user was given a "quite" area to talk on their cell phone, other passengers would be held captive. Would other passengers wishes who ask a cell-phone user to be quite after a couple of hours be respected? What of those passengers who want to sleep on a cross country trip? Would they be forced to listen to several hours of cell phone conversation? Cell phone use in airplanes is bad for passengers, bad for the airlines and bad for the nation and its security. No to cell phones in airplanes.
